Metro Micro is getting a shiny new app — here's what you need to know

Image Source: Metro the Source

Metro is making some changes to their popular rideshare program to make trips better, smoother and more convenient. A new Metro Micro app will be available for both iOS and Android.

What to expect in the new app:

Leave now options: Need a ride right away? You'll now have a "leave now" option on the app, which provides you the soonest available pickup time based on real-time vehicle availability and traffic conditions.

More ride notifications: We want to keep you in the loop from the moment you book your ride until you complete your trip. With the new app, not only will you receive notifications when your driver arrives and when you complete your ride.

And more!

Kavish Harjai | LAist

"Metro and the L.A. Department of Transportation launched a universal basic mobility pilot program called Metro Mobility Wallet in 2022. A second phase of the program began last year, enrolling 2,000 people and offering each $1,800 over the course of a year to spend on rail and bus rides and other transportation options. But Phase 2 has been beset by delays, and no one has yet been able to use the prepaid cards they were told would be in their hands early this year."
